Anthony McCall

You're taught never to touch the art, but in this little one-room installation by British artist Anthony McCall, you couldn't even if you tried. His light sculpture, 'Meeting You Halfway II', looks solid: in a pitch black room filled with smoke, the lines he creates in the space look like grey marble walls. But reach out and your hand drops right through. Duh, it's light. But that's all part of his trick: as you stand in the middle of lines, you feel trapped in solid matter. Trippy.
